Background of the holiday village

HOW IT ALL STARTED?

Once upon a time in Finland when there was living a family called Riiho. This family was living in Tuuri and they had their house beside the lake. Dad of this family, Jukka, later referred as "the man", was a dealer for excavators and one day on 2009 he decided to start digging a place for his family's new summer house.

"Summer house has to be beside the water", thought the man and excavated out of forest and field a pond and to the middle of that pond he made an island. In the region where the family lived they had a saying that goes: "If we don't have something, we'll either do it by ourselves or we don't need it all." When the pond and foundation for the house was finished they started to call the place by the name "Saarilampi" (pond with the island).

After finishing the foundation for the house they started to build the actual house. This house was planned by the man himself.

In summer 2012 the family dug the second pond.

Many people from the village came to see the place since it was a little village where they lived in and the word spread quickly and they said it looked like a Moomin house. The family wanted to have the house finished by the Midsummer Day and they succeeded in that.

They decided to have animals in summer 2011 since the younger daughter of the family wanted a horse. First a smaller pond for the ducks was made and after that a fencing for the sheep and for the Shetland pony called Juntti-Antti. All the animals needed a shelter for the winter so the building of the barn started on that same summer and it was finished by October that year.

In summer 2012 the warehouse was built near the house. In addition they built a gazebo on the island where they could have a place to barbecue.

On autumn 2013 the man started to talk about his idea concerning the holiday village. Jukka was determined to get the project started. In the beginning of November 2013 the building started and because the winter was warmer than normally it was easier for constructions. The house for the family would be one of the accommodation places in the holiday village and in addition two more cabins were built. Also the barn was turned into a reception building, which has two apartments, cafeteria and a restaurant. New barn for the animals was built near the holiday village.

The first phase of the project was finished just before the Midsummer day on June, 2014 and the grand opening was held at the same time, too. First guests came on that same summer. The building didn't stop on the first phase and it's still continuing.

The entire family is working in the holiday village: mom, Kristiina, is cleaning the cabins, younger daughter Marianna is taking care of the animals and the older one, Susanna, is working at the reception. Two sons, Topias and Joonas, are helping Jukka in building and maintenance.

The story is not even near the end yet and the man has lots of ideas for the holiday village, stay tuned!

Have a pleasant stay in our holiday village
